Introduction

The Faculty Development Committee (FDC) is a standing committee of the Franklin University Faculty Senate. This committee acts as a representative of the full- and part-time faculty of the university regarding issues related to faculty development.

The committee's primary responsibilities include:

- Making recommendations and offering advice on behalf of the faculty in regard to policies and procedures related to faculty professional development.
- Working in collaboration with the Center for Teaching Excellence and other University departments to establish the strategic priorities for faculty development.
- Reviewing and recommending methods of evaluating instructional effectiveness.
- Reviewing and recommending processes for orienting, mentoring, and developing faculty.
- Recommending and defining the components of faculty development which include, but are not limited to, the areas of discovery, integration, application, and teaching.

We strive to provide education around the broad topic of faculty development and continuous improvement of our teaching skillsets. Our primary audience is Franklin faculty enterprise-wide; however, we also open up specific events to all Franklin staff.

What does it mean to live a flourishing life, a positive life filled with joy, contentment, meaning, great relationships and accomplishment? In this interactive workshop we will explore the concept of flourishing and the role that mindset plays in helping us thrive at work and at home. We bring together the best of positive psychology to confidently deliver lessons with impact. It is an ideal opportunity to bring your team together to engage, learn and practice the skills that lead to thriving in life. This isn't just a "listen and learn" session but a hands-on workshop that engages your team to reflect, write, share and practice. The workshop is delivered with visual storytelling, inspirational video and interactive exercises.

Additionally, the workshop will begin with an overview of positive psychology, the power of our mind, and the science and benefits of flourishing. By recognizing it is the choices we make each day that lead to our ability to thrive, the audience will be inspired and empowered to grow.
